Y Days provide service, growth

While students may be overwhelmed with the beginning of school, BYU is helping make sure service to others is not neglected.

This week the Jacobsen Center for Service and Learning is sponsoring Y days, which offers a different project each day for students to give back to the community.

Service activities include making book bags for underprivileged students today, a letter writing session to support American troops over on Wednesday and a Food and Care Coalition Carnival on Thursday.

The center will also have an information fair on Friday held in the Wilkinson Student Center Terrace that will present many opportunities for students to serve.

Last year, Y days had 580 volunteers and performed 1,500 hours of service.

Monday students sanded blocks that would be made into toys for the Humanitarian Services project.

Documents like these were circulated by counterfeiter Mark Hofmann. The forgeries are, at top, "The Anton Transcript" alleged characters from the Gold Plates; "The Carthage Letter" allegedly written by the Prophet Joseph Smith; and, at bottom, "The Grandin Contract" supposed written between Smith, a printer and Martin Harris.

Infamous forger's fakes find favor

Salt Lake display highlights Hofmann

By Betsy McIff

NewsNet Staff Writer

Forged documents of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be on display this weekend in Salt Lake City.

The work of two-time murderer and expert forger Mark Hofmann will be open to the public nearly 20 years after his sentence to life in jail.

"We have been planning this exhibit and symposium for many years," said Melissa Sanders of Ken Sanders Rare Books. "It is only now that the people who were defrauded by Hofmann are ready to talk about it."

The exhibit will display more than four-dozen forged documents by Hofmann. Many will have side-by-side signatures, those of the original author and those forged by Hofmann, Sanders said.

Hofmann first began selling his forged documents in 1979 with the Anthon Transcript, said Jennifer Larson, antiquarian bookseller and noted Hofmann expert.

"The transcript was a document with hieroglyphic-type characters that were related to the characters Joseph Smith wrote about in the Book of Mormon," Larson said.

The transcript was sold that year to The Church of Jesus Christ for $20,000.

Larson said it is estimated Hofmann made $1 million a year with his forgeries and other fraudulent activities.

Hofmann not only forged church documents, but his works included many literary and historical documents.

On the surface, Hofmann was a trusted book and document dealer.

In 1985, his fraudulent activities surfaced after a series of bombings.

Hofmann had received $200,000 from a man by the name of Steve Christiansen as a payment for the McClellan Collection, said Larson. The documents Hofmann promised became so complicated he could not finish the deal.

"As an escape, he bombed and killed Steve Christiansen," Larson said. "He then proceeded to bomb and kill Kathleen Sheets, wife of Steve Christiansen's former business partner in an attempt make the police believe the deaths were in relation to investors."

The third bomb supposedly intended for another customer of Hofmann's, Brent Ashworth, blew up in his car, leading him to be investigated for and convicted of the other two bombings.

"We don't know what was in his mind when he began forging and selling his work," Larson said.

It took the work of two forensic document examiners to discover Hofmann's forgeries; unfortunately, the system does not work consistently on all of Hofmann's works.

"Every year new forgeries are being discovered and linked to Mark Hofmann," Sanders said. "Our motive with this exhibit and symposium is to educate people about forgery and inform them of the difficulty in discovery it."

New holiday honors victims

Utah County activities scheduled

By Krista R. Jorgensen

The hearts of Americans are expected to burn with patriotism and hope as the nation unites to commemorate Patriot Day, Sept. 11, to honor victims and their families.

For the year anniversary of the terrorist attacks, President George W. Bush has authorized a new national holiday, Patriot Day. The holiday was approved and named and will be celebrated each year.

A year ago, two hijacked airliners crashed into the World Trade Centers, and a third jet crashed into the Pentagon in Washington D.C. killing thousands of civilians and rescue workers.

President Bush said the holiday was created to "remember their sacrifice, and commit ourselves to honoring their memory by pursuing peace and justice in the world and security at home."

President Bush has asked Americans to attend and participate in appropriate events and to fly flags at half-staff throughout the day.

Utah will also have an active role in initiating this holiday through Gov. Michael Leavitt's Call to Action.

It will become a day of rebuilding, creating new hope and healing, said a governor spokeswoman. Citizens of Utah will participate in a one-minute statewide moment of silence at 9:45 a.m.

There will be flag ceremonies, art shows, activities in schools, and light vigils throughout the state.

Some of the day's events will be broadcast in Utah schools. Many students at BYU will be involved in Patriot Day because several professors are canceling classes.

Air filters considered at postal facilities

WASHINGTON — Air filtering equipment being considered for installation in postal facilities to protect against another biological attack needs further testing, says an investigative report.

The post office began looking into protective systems in the wake of last fall's anthrax attacks which killed five people, including two postal workers. Major mail processing centers in Washington and New Jersey remain closed until they can be decontaminated.

Among the systems under consideration are high efficiency air filtering systems for mail processing centers to remove biological contamination from the air.

But a study by Congress' General Accounting Office, released Monday, said the post office needs to further evaluate whether the filter systems will do the job.

It also questions the estimated $245 million cost of the project and whether electrical demand of the systems will affect other postal machinery.

At least 24 dead after China typhoon

SHANGHAI, China — Thousands of people in southeastern China were living in tents Monday after typhoon Sinlaku ripped apart homes and claimed at least 24 lives.

Some 300,000 people were forced out of their homes in and around the city of Wenzhou after Typhoon Sinlaku slammed into coastal Zhejiang province Saturday with winds up to 87 mph, said an official in the city's Disaster Relief Office.

Most had returned by Monday morning, but several thousand were still in tents, said the official, who would give only his surname, Zhang.

High winds and landslides destroyed more than 14,000 homes, Zhang said.

Leader of largest polygamist sect dies

SALT LAKE CITY — Rulon T. Jeffs, the leader of what may be the nation's largest polygamist sect, has died of natural causes, a church spokesman said.

Jeffs, head of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, died Sunday at Dixie Medical Center in St. George of natural causes, said church attorney R. Scott Berry.

The church has thousands of members, mostly in the twin border communities of Hildale, Utah, and Colorado City, Ariz. It also has an enclave in Creston Valley, British Columbia, near the Idaho border. Estimates of the membership have ranged as high as 12,000, but Berry said it probably was 6,000 to 8,000.

Jeffs, an accountant, was rumored to have had from 19 to 75 wives and dozens of children, KSL Radio said. Berry said no information on that would be disclosed.

Columbia to receive U.S. military aid

WASHINGTON — The State Department on Monday cleared the way for giving $41.6 million in arms and equipment to Colombia, certifying that the country's military has met human rights requirements in three areas.

Congress had refused to provide the military aid until the State Department certified that the Colombian military had suspended military personnel who had engaged in grave human rights violations, cooperated with civilian prosecutors in rights cases and was severing ties with rightist paramilitary groups.

A similar certification in May led to the release of $61 million.

Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage formally certified Colombian compliance Monday morning. State Department officials explained the decision to representatives of human rights groups.

The certification was assailed by William Shulz, executive director of Amnesty International USA.

"To say that Colombia has complied with human rights conditions is nothing short of a farce," Shulz said, alleging that the Colombian military has not made significant progress in any of the three areas.

French president consider military force against Irac

Associated Press

PARIS — French President Jacques Chirac has laid out a scenario for a three-week deadline that could open the way to using force against Iraq, joining a growing list of leaders who say they could envisage military action against Baghdad.

Spain and the Netherlands on Monday joined other anxious allies who, while not signing on to President Bush's conviction that military action is necessary, are not closing the door.

Britain squarely backs Bush's view that Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein must be ousted by force, and Italy has also shown support.

Germany has categorically rejected any military action, and Russia has said it opposes the use of force. In an interview with The New York Times published Monday, Chirac suggested a two-step plan by which the United Nations might permit the use of force – via a Security Council resolution giving Iraq a three-week deadline to allow the return of U.N. weapons inspectors.

The inspectors must have a free hand. If that were refused, a second resolution on whether to use military force would be passed, Chirac said.

U.N. inspectors trying to determine whether Iraq possesses biological, chemical or nuclear weapons left Iraq in 1998 and have been barred from returning since.

> "Nothing is impossible, if it is decided by the international community on the basis of indisputable proof."
> — Jacques Chirac, French president

Chirac, in the interview, was cautious about not saying whether, even then, France would join in military action.

But Chirac's plan appeared to be the closest he has come to allowing for the eventual use of force, and the most outspoken he has been against Iraq's leader, calling him "especially dangerous to his own people."

"Nothing is impossible, if it is decided by the international community on the basis of indisputable proof" of the existence of weapons of mass destruction, Chirac said. "For the moment, we have neither proof nor decisions."

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, who met Chirac last week, did not comment on the deadline proposal. But Annan on Monday insisted the U.N. Security Council, "which has been seized with this Iraqi issue for so long, should have something to say."

"I think it is appropriate that the Council pronounces itself on the issue," he told reporters.

In the past, France was a key Western trade partner of Iraq, and Paris jealously guarded those ties.

France nevertheless joined the multinational coalition in the Gulf War against Iraq.

With Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair saying they were confident they can persuade other nations to back their Iraqi policy, Baghdad insists the two leaders are lying about alleged evidence of Iraqi weapons programs.

Arab League Secretary-General Amr Moussa urged Washington on Monday to give inspectors a chance, saying there is "a strong possibility" Iraq would let them in.

Dutch Prime Minister Jan-Peter Balkenende said that military action was a last resort, and that Iraq should accept weapons inspectors to avert war, he told the newspaper Parool.

"Saddam Hussein is b destruction on himself," the leader said, adding tha proven connection to Osa Laden's al-Qaida terror n could also be cause to "exp struggle against terrorism t

Utah debates right to revoke parental rights

Aaron Anderson
http://newsroom.byu.edu
Universe Staff Writer

> "I make better arrangements for my children when I go to the movies. These parents were going to be gone much longer than two hours. It seems to me that they didn't care."
> — Martha Pierce, attorney

Parental rights of a mother [illegible] are in jeopardy after the Utah Supreme Court considered the case Tuesday morning.

The argument in this case is whether the state of Utah has the right to terminate parental rights of a mother and father who do not live with them.

The parents in question, who have not been identified, are serving prison time in Texas and Utah after being separately convicted of sexually abusing [illegible]'s 13-year-old son has been in Utah state foster care [illegible]. His older sister, who [illegible] guardianship, was [illegible] care for the boy and [illegible] over to the state.

[illegible] of Utah found the boy's [illegible] parents unfit and determined that their parental rights should be terminated.

[illegible] Mitchell, attorney for the [illegible] are how sensitive this case is.

"The issue here is whether Utah has the right to terminate parental rights," she said.

Mitchell recognizes the boy's biological parents do have legal ground to oppose the ruling, but feels strongly that they should not maintain their parental rights.

"They can't hide behind the federal constitution," Mitchell said. "The boy is here and his parents are elsewhere."

According to Jim Shirley, attorney for the boy's mother, Utah has the authority to make decisions about the boy's foster care but they do not have jurisdiction to terminate parental rights.

Utah officials say the boy's parents were notified of the termination proceedings but chose not to participate.

"Incarcerated parents communicate all of the time," said Martha Pierce, an attorney defending the boy's welfare.

The boy's parents could have communicated their concerns by telephone or by video with Utah State attorneys but no contact was made, she said.

Pierce continued by saying that terminating the parental rights in this case is justified.

"Most parents in jail make arrangements for their children," Pierce said.

Upon entering jail, the boy's parents had made no long-term plans for their son.

"I make better arrangements for my children when I go to the movies. These parents were going to be gone much longer than two hours," Pierce said. "It seems to me that they didn't care."

As for the boy, he does not understand why his foster family cannot adopt him.

"They love him and he loves them," Pierce said.

"They want to be a family and are frustrated that this is still going on," she said.

The Utah Supreme Court has not ruled in this case, but a decision should be reached by the end of this year.

Justice Richard C. Howe will be ruling on the parental rights case.

LDS Church supports laws against same-sex marriage

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — As it did with similar initiatives in California, Hawaii, Alaska and other states, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is actively promoting Nevada's "Protection of Marriage" act.

"We are part of that coalition" backing the proposed ban on recognition of single-sex marriage, Church spokesman Dale Bills confirmed.

Many states already define marriage as between an adult man and woman, so the main effort has been passing federal law and state constitutional amendments to ensure states would not be required to recognize gay or lesbian marriages licensed elsewhere.

The Church made direct contributions of $500,000 and $600,000, respectively, to the successful "Protection of Marriage" ballot measures in Alaska and Hawaii. Both were successful.

In most states, the Church enlists its local congregation leaders and other local church leaders to encourage members to volunteer and donate privately to the campaigns.

It has been doing that in Nevada, where a ballot drive that began two years ago was successful in passing its first general-election vote with 70 percent support. Amending Nevada's constitution requires approval in two consecutive elections, so the Coalition for the Protection of Marriage is gearing up again for the Nov. 5 election. By the end of August, the group had $523,000 in the bank and was busy raising more.

"Obviously, the majority of the groups are faith-based groups who have moral reasons," coalition leader Richard Ziser said. The LDS Church is a "very, very big supporter," he said, but the coalition includes many other churches.

How could we forget?

Some are calling for a national holiday. Others say we should treat it as a day like any other. Americans are split on the best way to remember September 11.

The U.S. news media have special newspaper inserts, catchy slogans and weeklong television specials to commemorate this tragic day. Some people are accusing the media of trying to capitalize on the tragedy while others believe the coverage provides an appropriate memorial to the victims of the attacks.

The days after last September's terrorist attacks showed Americans at their best: supportive, patriotic and united. Streets were lined with American flags as citizens expressed their commitment to freedom and democratic ideals. Church congregations swelled nationwide. Volunteers and donations poured into New York and Washington from all parts of the country. Millions more searched for ways to contribute from their own communities.

Now the flags have come down, the World Trade Center site has been cleared, Pentagon reconstruction is under way and support money is dwindling. People have begun to wonder if we have forgotten Sept. 11.

But how could we forget?

When a traveler goes through airport security, he remembers. When tourists visit the Statue of Liberty but may no longer climb the steps to the top, they remember. When a news anchor mentions Afghanistan, Iraq or Osama bin Laden, viewers remember. When airline employees are laid off, they remember.

However, remembering the Sept. 11 attacks does not mean constantly thinking about them.

For example, when a man and woman get married, it affects the rest of their lives. They don't have to wake up each morning and think about their wedding day to remember they are married. They live together, they raise children together, they celebrate together, they cry together. When they are getting kids ready for school, they do not have to stop and remember their marriage. Couples have no need to constantly remember their wedding because every aspect of their lives reflects the decision they made years earlier.

Americans may ask themselves, "Do we still remember Sept. 11?" but what they should ask is, "How do the events of Sept. 11 continue to affect our lives? How have our attitudes, prejudices, fears and expectations changed?" Americans must never forget the deadliest terrorist attacks in history, but we must also move forward. Almost every aspect of our nation has been affected including politics, economics, religion, journalism, travel, and security.

The events of Sept. 11 will scar world history forever, but America must learn and grow. We will not forget because we cannot forget.

With class just barely 1 week old, I can unequivocally say it feels great to be back.

Just a few nights ago, I was still apprehensive about my seemingly premature return to early morning classes that always seems to follow far too closely to the previous nights study group (inevitably dispersed by a brass band rendition of "When the Saints Go Marching In). The astronomical textbook bill that tested the limits of both my credit card and my resolve to never cry in public had almost done me in.

But then it happened.

While riding my scooter home from a friend's apartment late Thursday night, I saw her. The preeminent icon of BYU womanhood.

She might be your sister's roommate, or that girl from Southern California who sits in front of you in that really boring GE class that you've delayed taking semester after semester after semester. She might be the young lady sitting at the round table across the terrace from you right now, that one who made "accidental" eye contact four times in the last 15 minutes.

She is the "midnight runner." Throwing caution to the wind, she runs mile after mile on darkened streets in pursuit of the perfect body.

What is she thinking? Now it's true that according to FBI crime statistics Provo is the second-safest city in the nation, and I acknowledge that physical appearance plays an important role in spouse selection — especially since the ideal LDS marriage lasts a few million years longer then the current national average. With these facts in mind, I can see that there is some pressure to attract an eternally tolerable spouse, but ladies, please!

I wonder, is this the same young lady who moments earlier called her really cute Elder's Quorum president, mobilizing the Safe-Walk program, only to immediately don sweats and cross-trainers to zip off in the direction of the Tree Streets?

I guess when you really think about it, it makes sense. We've all made huge sacrifices just to get in to BYU, and whether you sacrifice sleep for grades, precious study time for a roommate that really needs to talk or your personal safety for the chance to once again fit into those jeans that looked soooo cute at the begging of freshman year, we all continually sacrifice for those things we value most. Sacrifice is just part of being a Cougar.

And that's why it's good to be back.

I know the all-nighters and cold predawn journeys to campus are just around the corner, but, in the end, even after all the sacrifices, being a Cougar is worth it all.

So for inspiring me to arise before dawn and to trudge boldly out into the darkness, midnight runner girls, I salute you!

READERS' FORUM

Shocked by ads

Dear Editor,

I was shocked and appalled by the recent one-page advertisement by the BYU Bookstore. I understand that they are a business and have a right to advertise, even if it is deceptive, but the altruistic attitude is what bothers me.

Since buying my books, online I have saved 20 percent to 50 percent on each book I bought online compared to the Bookstore. My friend bought his books for $270 new (that includes shipping) compared to the $350 that is charged in the Bookstore.

Granted, that took three weeks of planning before school started, but all the books were there before school started. There are many sites like www.addall.com that compare prices of 20 to 30 online bookstores. Although the Bookstore might say it is loyal to me, it is a business and I have no loyalty to it. If I can get a better deal somewhere else, I'll take it.

Doing funky chicken

Dear Editor,

Thanks to Rebecca Kellogg for her excellent article on myths at BYU. But the fact is that Myth No. 4 is no myth: Brigham Young still does the funky chicken.

As my father, a BYU alumnus, taught me, you have to run past the ASB on the more-or-less diagonal path between the JKHB and Brigham Square at night. The dark window frames of the ASB, when viewed around and through Brother Brigham's legs, create the illusion that he is, in fact, doing the funky chicken.

You may need to repeat the run a couple of times before you can see the effect. But be warned — do not run into the park benches that BYU has carelessly placed in your path. Also keep in mind that the sight of the American Moses doing the funky chicken is so sublimely hilarious that you will quickly lose the little breath you have left after doing all that running. Any ensuing loss of consciousness may not be easy to explain to an insurance company.

During my time at BYU, I have been shocked to discover how few BYU students have heard that President Young does the funky chicken, much less seen it for themselves. The same could be said for the aquarium in the bottom floor of the Widsoe building.

It is every BYU student's responsibility to learn the mythology surrounding this university and transmit it wholly and accurately to the mini-Cougars they roll around campus in strollers.

If we lose this precious knowledge, what will BYU become? Some sort of boarding school for Mormons?

Whether our kids know what the funky chicken is or not is their own problem.

All-Sport Pass concern

Dear Editor,

Did anyone else feel cheated with the All-Sport Passes this year? They went on sale a week before school even started. Many students were not even in the area yet by the time the regular passes were sold out. The e-mail announcing the sale of the All-Sport Passes was not even sent out a week before the sale started. Are we expected to just drop all of our plans and run up to BYU to buy the passes?

I went straight to the Marriott Center after having driven for 11 hours only to find that the regular All-Sport Passes were sold out. To top it all off, we didn't even get a ticket to the Syracuse game, yet were still charged the $75 like everyone else. I am disappointed with the Athletic Department for their lack of planning. Why couldn't you have sold the first game tickets separately, so that all would have an opportunity to buy the good student seats that rotate each game, instead of ending up in the same nosebleed seat every game.

I think it would be a nice move if the Athletic Department did something to rectify the results of their ignorant planning. How about trading seats?

Living within standards

Dear Editor,

During our time before we came to BYU, my husband and I attended a variety of nightclubs in the United States and Europe as singles. We both loved to dance and lived in areas where church-sponsored dances were very limited. During that time, we felt disappointed, almost ashamed at the suggestive dancing, poor lighting, loud music and questionable lyrics. We decided that they were not within the standard the Lord wanted us to live. We came to BYU with high hopes of good uplifting dances.

In the last six years, we have appreciated the smoke and alcohol free environment provided at ward, stake and other BYU endorsed dances. However, we have still seen and felt too many of the other disappointments we experienced at nightclubs. In the 2001 edition For the Strength of Youth, the First Presidency states, "Because the Lord loves you, He has given you commandments and the words of prophets to guide you on your journey. Some of the most important guidelines for your life are found in this pamphlet (p.2)." We searched the pamphlet for guidance on this subject.

Our main concerns are the suggestive movements, loudness and music selection we have found at BYU. At a recent dance, we could hardly hear each other over the extreme loudness of the music. After dancing for half an hour, the monotonous beat and questionable lyrics reminded us of the counsel, "Plan to attend dances where dress, grooming, lighting, lyrics and music contribute to a wholesome atmosphere where the Spirit of the Lord may be present (p.21)." While taking a break, we noticed that many of the girls were moving their bodies in suggestive ways allowing their shirts to expose their stomachs. Does this reflect the standard in the following statement? "Th... your dress and appearance, you can... the Lord that you know how pr... your body is. You can show that y... a disciple of Christ (p.14)."

Devotional remembers Sept. 11

By Moriah Robertson
moriah@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

In a show of patriotism and faith, the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will conduct a remembrance service Sept. 11 featuring the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

"Occasions of this kind pull us up sharply to a realization that life is fragile, peace is fragile, civilization itself is fragile," said President Gordon B. Hinckley in a news release.

The devotional service, which will begin at noon, will include patriotic and spiritual musical numbers, as well as a message of encouragement by President James E. Faust.

Kim Farah, of the Church Headquarters Public Affairs Office, said the church decided to hold a special service to give the community the opportunity to remember the tragic events of Sept. 11.

It also provides a place for people to gather to express their faith and to remember those victims and their families, she said.

Farah also said that the church is trying to tie in with other churches in giving the community the opportunity to show faith, support the leaders of our country and to remember the events of Sept. 11.

President Thomas S. Monson will conduct the service.

The program, which is open to the public, should last approximately 30 minutes. Tickets are not required for admittance.

KBYU-TV and BYU Television will broadcast the program live, along with live audio broadcasts on KBYU-FM and BYU Radio. The devotional can also be heard via audio on the DISH Network and online at byuradio.org.

Farah said the Mormon Tabernacle Choir has released recordings of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "America the Beautiful" to remember the events of Sept. 11.

The Today show will feature a musical selection by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

A special message by President Hinckley will also be broadcast on campus following the devotional.

BYUSA will broadcast the message live at the Wilkinson Center terrace. The presentation will last for one hour.

Being Muslim today

Students struggle to correct understanding of Islam

By Jillian Doria
doria@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

For BYU Muslim student Hani Almadahoun, Sept. 11, 2001, started as a normal day.

He went jogging in the morning with his roommate, checked his email and read the newspaper. By that time, the first plane hit the World Trade Center.

He said he remembers asking his roommate what was going on and not believing the news.

But Almadahoun, 21, a junior majoring in international studies who is from the Gaza Strip, decided to just get ready for school and put on his souvenir twin towers New York City T-shirt that he got ten days before while he was on vacation.

After his morning class, he saw some students watching CNN and asked them what was going on.

"This guy came up to me and said 'some people destroyed the two buildings,'" Almadahoun recalled. "And I said 'whoa, are they suspecting anybody?' The guy replied 'well they think some Palestinian terrorists did it.' And there I was, a Palestinian with a New York T-shirt on."

Another BYU Muslim student, Laila Lamani, 21, from Morocco majoring in international relations, recalled when she got on campus that day.

She said she didn't know who to say hi to because she didn't even know how her friends would feel.

"But I was surprised because people would come up to me and ask if I was OK," she said.

"We didn't know how people were going to react to us," said her friend Enass Tinah, 28, a graduate from Jerusalem-Palestine student studying molecular biology.

"But the days following Sept. 11 was a totally different story. I was able to call my parents and tell them, 'Don't worry, people here are different and everything is OK. We trying to deal with this, but we don't need to leave, that's for sure,'" Tinah said.

Because of support and understanding from the BYU faculty, Almadahoun, Lamani and Tinah generally agree that as Muslims at BYU, they are living a good life here.

"Whatever problems we face, there are people who listen, and they will always try to solve these problems," Tinah said. "And for being different on this campus in this community, they consider us a new perspective on religion."

Just over 50 Muslim students attend BYU. Between classes, work and being in an environment that makes them a significant religious minority, Muslims students find it hard to balance it all.

Almadahoun finds that Friday, the Islam holy day, is not much different from the rest of his week. He still has classes and work, so sometimes he ends up fitting three of the five Islamic prayers in while he is at work or when he gets home.

Tinah said a Muslim prayer takes about 30 minutes, so it is hard to find time to fit it between classes.

"I've been here for four years and my Fridays are filled with classes or meetings. It's so ordinary here for me," she said. "When you are in a Muslim community there is a feeling that Friday is a holiday and everybody acts like it."

Another misunderstanding Muslim students face is the judgment of the Middle East conflict.

"Sometimes people don't understand. They take one aspect of everything happening in the Middle East and don't look at the whole picture," Tinah said.

She recalled a time when a BYU student told her that although he did not agree with what was happening in the Middle East, the Bible says that it is the Jewish people's land and if it's written in the Bible, it's 100 percent correct.

"And I said that you cannot say that God is so unjust to have allowed something like that to happen," Tinah said.

"He was confused for a little and couldn't respond. Then he just said, 'No, it is written in the Bible, so it is right, and the Jews have the right to do everything,'" she said.

With the Iraq situation in the spotlight, some students and professors sometimes misuse Muslim and Arab to mean the same thing, Lamani said.

But there is always someone else in class who corrects them and it is nice that she doesn't have to answer to them, she said.

"We have to explain the difference a lot," Tinah said. "Some think that all Arabs are Muslims, and all Muslims are Arab when in fact, the biggest Muslim community is non-Arab."

The veil or the headdress is also another misunderstanding. It is mostly associated with suppression or the loss of women's rights in the Muslim world when it is really a religious commitment and a choice, Tinah said.

The decision to wear a headdress is a personal choice when a woman feels the time is right.

Tinah made that decision when she was 13 years old. Because she is one of the few Muslim women on campus who wears a Muslim headdress, she finds that people automatically decide that she is oppressed in her country.

"I try to explain to people that the economic and social situation is bad for both men and women," she said.

Lamani, who doesn't wear a headdress, gets many questions on why she doesn't wear a headdress.

"They don't understand that it is a choice to wear it. That it is when we have to explain it to them that we don't have to do it," Lamani said.

Professor offers understanding of Islam through an LDS perspective

By Jillian Doria
doria@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Brian Hauglid, an assistant professor of ancient scripture, faces a new challenge in his fall semester's class, Islam and the Gospel — what new insights to teach after last year's Sept. 11 tragedy.

Then, as he watched a PBS special on remembering Sept. 11, the program gave a religious perspective on the tragedy.

He recalled the program commented that religion gives us passion for life; a passion to be better.

This goes for any religion, he said, but added that unfortunately, all religions somehow breed passion that spawns destruction too.

"I'm sure those people believed that when they were going into those towers that they were doing God's will," Hauglid said.

"But it was a destructive thing that happened, but somehow they rationalized that it was what God wanted them to do. But it was that same passion that drove them. They thought they were doing the right thing," he said.

Hauglid, who also teaches a world religions class, points out that the events of Sept. 11 was essentially a religious issue because it showed how religion is a two-edge sword, because people twist it and make it destructive.

Ever since Sept. 11, Islam has been in the foreground of Americans' minds and Hauglidsaid he feels that understanding Islam is important so people don't quickly disregard the world's population of 1.2 billion Muslims as terrorists.

Hauglid said the questions students ask him the most are 'Is that what Islam is about? Is this the kind of thing Muslims are taught? Are they all terrorists? Do they hate us?"

"Islam is one of the most misunderstood world religions," he said. "This class looks at Islam in the context of a Latter-day Saint and is to help young people appreciate and understand Islam."

Natali Montague, 21, a senior English major, from Kansas City, Mo., was part of the last group that attended the Jerusalem center.

She remembered as she heard statements that Muslims hated America, she couldn't believe the blanket statement because of her experience at the Jerusalem Center.

"The Muslim people loved BYU students," she recalled. "I feel sad when I hear of the bad conditions there; I have patriotism for my country but I have a personal place in my heart for the [Middle East]."

Hoyt W. Brewster, an Education Week presenter, spoke in a lecture series titled "Sept. 11: An LDS perspective." He reminded the audience that Muslims are as diverse as any group of people.

"There is a distinction between the individual and the religion," he said.

Brewster also pointed out many similarities between the LDS and Islamic faith.

For example, the Islamic religion is based on principles called the Five Pillars: Faith, Prayer, Zakat, Fast, and Pilgrimage.

Zakat, is Arabic for "alms giving" This principle guid Muslims to purify material thing by setting them aside for those need.

Muslims calculate their ow zakat individually, but it is usua ly a yearly donation of 2 perce of capital.

This support for the needy similar to the LDS commandme of tithing, which asks members donate 10 percent of their incom

"People need to understar other religions' teachings so th when we teach about the LD religion we find commc ground," Brewster said.

Aaron Gardner is an employee at Primary Children's hospital, former head duty supervisor for the BYU EMS organization and current EMS volunteer.

"In the realm of health care there isn't much you can do without the initials after your name," Gardner said. "EMS is a good way to actually work with people and not just sit in a classroom. It was a nice breath of fresh air to get out of the classroom where we get to help people, and see what difference we can make out there. And it's a whole lot of fun."

According to Byrd, the EMS club saves the university more than $100,000 a year.

It also saves the student about $600 if they are transported by the EMS van rather than an ambulance, he said.

"It saves BYU a ton of money," Jones said. "We take people to the hospital or to the BYU Health Center. It takes some of the load off of the Provo ambulance and fire department."

Byrd teaches a course on campus to certify to become a Utah EMT. The course starts today and ends Nov. 23, is on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9:30 p.m. and some Saturdays in 1510 WSC.

The same class is offered in other places in Utah.

"I've attended some of their training. It's pretty intense." Scharman said. "They have professionals who come in on a regular basis and they make sure the students are trained to use new equipment."

Supplies for the organization are funded by many different sources. Recently the program was given a mentoring grant so students can get additional training and support.

"This is the first time we've gotten a grant," Byrd said. "We just piece together whatever money we have to keep it going. We have the support of the state of Utah and the dean of students. The police also helped us get the emergency medical van."

According to Gardner, only a handful of university's across the country have similar organizations.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (U-WIRE) — Enron, WorldCom, Arthur Andersen and the University of Alabama?

In a summer full of accounting scandals, some professors are warning that such a comparison isn't all that farfetched.

As those companies distorted profits and losses, the University has been distorting its students' grades, said history professor David Beito and anthropology professor Charles Nuckolls.

To back up this claim, Beito and Nuckolls, using data compiled by the Office of Institutional Research, compared grades given in a four-semester period between 1972 and 1974 to those in a similar period between 2000 and 2002. They found increases in the number of A's granted in every college but one — the College of Engineering.

The greatest increase, they said, was reported in the College of Education, which awarded 166 percent more A's in the 2000-02 study period than in 1972-74. With 55 percent of grades in education classes reported as "A," more than any college at the University, Nuckolls said he wondered why the college's proportion of A's seemed out of line with its students' average ACT scores, which he said are the lowest in the University.

"If anything, there seems to be a negative correlation between ACT scores and the percentage of As granted," Nuckolls said. He noted that the College of Engineering's average ACT score is the University's highest, yet students in engineering courses make As only 36 percent of the time.

Across the board, University professors grant 37.6 percent more As now than they did in 1972-74. Attributing this spike in A's to a corresponding increase in student quality, Beito said, is incorrect.

"The average ACT scores for entering freshmen have increased by relatively little, from 22.9 to 24.5," Beito said. That 7 percent increase, he said, does not come anywhere close to explaining the number of new As the University has granted between the 1970s and now.

Beito and Nuckolls further analyzed the College of Arts and Sciences' data and found disparities between individual departments. While 78 percent of 100- and 200-level women's studies students made A's in the last four semesters, only 12 percent of students in 100- and 200-level biology courses did so.

Ida M. Johnson, chairwoman of the department of women's studies, disagreed with Nuckolls and Beito's conclusion that the proportion of A's in lower-level women's studies classes constitutes grade inflation. She said she believes the nature of her department's lower-level class is conducive to a higher than average number of A's.

"WS 200,Introduction to Women's Studies, is taught as a seminar class with a maximum enrollment of 20 students," Johnson said. "There were no comparative data provided on class size, i.e., the comparison of grade distribution for small versus large introductory level courses, nor were comparative data provided on the structure of the course (seminar versus lecture)."

Johnson said the students who take her department's introductory class, unlike those in "core" departments like mathematics, are self-selected and often upperclassmen. The introductory women's studies class, then, should be compared to other self-selected, small seminars instead of 100- and 200-level classes University-wide.

"Our grades illustrate that we attract a good, interested and highly motivated group of students who perform very well in the classroom," Johnson said.

Nuckolls and Beito's study included one example of grade disparities in such a seminar environment — the Blount Undergraduate Initiative's freshman classes. Every Blount freshman takes BUI 101 in the fall and BUI 102 in the spring. The classes are taught by seven tenured professors in classes of about 15 students each, but the reading list is the same regardless of professor.

Despite identical reading lists, Nuckolls and Beito found a wide variety of grade distributions among Blount professors. One professor, they said, awarded A's to 81.7 percent of students one semester, while another only gave A's 18.7 percent of the time. Such disparities, the professors argue, contribute to grade inflation because students learn these tendencies and gravitate to professors with whom they know they have a better chance of making an A.

"[This] serves to degrade the efforts of those students who might otherwise take 'harder' courses," Nuckolls said. "Under such a system, the student transcript loses its value as a source of information for potential employers who need to judge the comparative qualifications of UA graduates."

Joe Hornsby, director of the Blount Undergraduate Initiative, defended his program from charges of inflation and disparity.

"There will be some natural disparity among different professors," Hornsby said. "And some classes will have more A's because of a higher quality of student."

Hornsby dismissed the 81.7 percent figure as an aberration, pointing out that the other six Blount professors that semester gave 53, 47, 38, 37 and 46 percent As. The faculty teaching Blount classes changes every semester, Hornsby said, so Blount cannot be used as a representative study.

Nuckolls and Beito also took exception to a practice common in the departments of mathematics and English — the "NC," or no credit, grade given in 100-level classes.

When he asked the department of English why it uses an "NC" to eliminate the possibility of failure in its entry-level classes, Beito said he was told that "the idea is to remove punitive aspects of grading a necessary skill," and that "the skill of writing competence is necessary to success in college; allowing students to keep trying to get better, then, is a 'client-friendly' approach to making it clear to them that they must achieve that level of competence." Nuckolls criticized this attitude as indicative of one of the root causes of grade inflation — what he termed the "commercialization of the academy."

"This attitude that transforms students into clients and professors into service providers is to blame," Nuckolls said.

The department of English has been using the "NC" designation since the 1970s. It was implemented in the department of mathematics in the 1990s. In 100-level English classes, 11.6 percent of students received NC's over the course of the past two years, while 22.8 percent of 100-level math students were given a non-grade in the same four-semester period.

"This system converts 'losses' into 'gains' through an accounting practice that avoids reporting lower grades," Nuckolls said. "Think WorldCom."

Though the forgiveness policy, which allowed students to exempt three low grades from grade point average calculations, was repealed last year, Nuckolls said the NC system is just a backdoor forgiveness policy.

"The NC system is based on the assumption that grades are penalties and that students do better when they are not given the chance to fail," Nuckolls said. "Students devote themselves overwhelmingly to courses that grade them."

"Auburn doesn't do this," Beito said. "Neither does Shelton State. If we're the flagship university of the state, let's have standards up to Shelton State's."

Repealing the no credit designation is one of the solutions the professors say will help combat grade inflation. Another idea Nuckolls said he will push for, an online database comparing the average grades that professors award, has been implemented at Indiana University.

"Indiana is 50 percent larger than Alabama, and they do it," Nuckolls said. Making the grades that professors give public, he said, will make them less inclined to award too many easy A's.

Ranking students in each class, Beito said, will help employers understa whether the A that earned in a course excellence or merely s fessor who gives most A. The rank would no grade but would inste it, indicating, for exa student who earned class had the 19th hi out of 50 students.

"It's already been do fully at Dartmouth,"

Bringing more infor into the open, Nuckoll benefit the entire Univ

Right now, he sa meaningful data on g the University is a sl bureaucratic process. Beito and philosophy Max Hocutt and Jim O to research grade infl were told they needed to access the data and through red tape before ly got to it.

"It's a lesson from said. "Information tran key. We don't need s need openness."

Nuckolls said he w aged by interim President Barry Mason ment to addressing gra and making grade accessible.

"President Mason this should be Nuckolls said. "Oth looks like we have so hide."

UVSC looks to eliminate traffic woes

Associated Press

OREM — As students poured out of classes on the first day of school, Utah Valley State College's traffic plan nearly collapsed.

Some 25,000 students, plus faculty members, custodians and food vendors arrived on a campus that has parking for about 30,000 cars.

College officials are looking into adding a $700,000 auxiliary lane at Sandhill Road and University Parkway, the gateway to the college and to Brigham Young University.

The intersection also serves Wal-Mart and dozens of other businesses.

In 2000, when the eight-lane interchange at University Parkway was being built, college officials fought a federal order to remove a "hook" ramp that merged onto an Interstate-15 ramp. A traffic survey showed as many as 400 cars an hour use the hook ramp during peak driving times.

College administrators say the hook ramp alleviated traffic jams without causing a single accident in four years.

The Federal Highway Administration considers the design dangerous, but the Utah Department of Transportation does not, said Tracy Conti, a regional UDOT director.

The Federal Highway Administration won't consider funding the project until Utah County satisfies air-quality standards, but those standards could be changed by October, opening the door to funding.

ts wear backpacks too t tight enough or slung ne shoulder, all improper t lead to back problems .

Wearing the backpack over one shoulder can cause that shoulder to go out of alignment. Not having straps tightened properly can lead to back pain. Seven in 10 students wear their backpacks incorrectly, according to Dr. Stephen Herto, a member of Backpack Safety America.

"You don't get these problems in one day," Herto said. "In years, you can go numb. Improper use leads to postural changes which lead to spinal changes which lead to nerve problems which lead to pain problems."

The majority of the pain focuses on shoulders, neck and back, and those that pull packs on wheels may suffer from wrist problems. The weight of a backpack force people to hunch over with their shoulders rounded and head jutting forward.

"I have shoulder problems anyway, so I rotate shoulders," said Katie Madden, a senior special education and psychology major. "It gets sore from carrying usually three or four books."

Dr. Wayne Yankus (www.schoolhealth.org) has a few recommendations for safe backpack wearing.

1. Pack backpacks well and empty out unnecessary items.
2. Wear straps on both shoulders.
3. Carry less than 20 percent of your body weight.
4. Distribute the weight evenly across the bottom of the bag.

dy: Religious beliefs help students deal with Sept. 11 stress

NEAPOLIS (U-WIRE) — t survey conducted by a team in the University of ta's psychology depart- ows 8 percent of 188 stu- et the criteria for a diag- post-traumatic stress dis- ter the Sept. 11 attacks.

ugh many students felt oss of control after the the team was surprised to any individuals felt they e control over the situation through their belief in a god.

The survey was given to undergraduate psychology students for extra credit. Patricia Frazier, a psychology professor, conducted the study and said the terrorist attacks offered a unique opportunity to document tragic events' positive and negative effects.

"Sept. 11 was an unprecedented event where no one was in control," Frazier said. "I was interested in how this loss of control would affect people."

Those who believe in a higher power showed fewer signs of post-traumatic stress disorder than those who believe the events were controlled by individuals, according to the study.

Individuals who believed a god was in control reported more positive life changes, while those who did not reported fewer positive changes.

Those changes included a better appreciation of life, closeness to family and beliefs in the goodness of people.

Half the students surveyed thought the biggest effect was positive, while 45 percent said it was negative. Five percent had mixed feelings.

Many students reported feeling negative change in their lives in areas of safety, fairness and justice.

Ninety percent reported experiencing at least one symptom of post-traumatic stress disorder, the study says. A similar November study conducted by the New England Journal of Medicine found the same result.

Because of the small sample, it is unclear if the results could be representative of the University as a whole, Frazier said.

Campuses struggle to separate Islam from terrorism

By Marie Mackay

> "It continues to amaze me that sometimes people don't use common sense and put themselves in other people's shoes."
> — Amal Kawar, USU political science professor

LOGAN, Utah (U-WIRE) — The Koran and Allah are all familiar words learned, recognized and even hated since the events of Sept. 11.

Even though many Utah State University students, Cache Valley residents and Americans know about Islam and its followers, Muslims, some still link them with terrorism.

"It continues to amaze me that sometimes people don't use common sense and put themselves in other people's shoes," said Amal Kawar, USU political science professor. "There are already a lot of overgeneralizations because of an overbiased media, and I feel bad for the people who do that because it makes them look ignorant."

People should realize one terrorist action took a toll on the lives and beliefs of Muslims and members of other religions alike,said Syed Sohardwardy, who is a Muslim.

"A terrorist should be identified and condemned as a terrorist, but a terrorist should not be identified with his or her religious affiliation," Sohardwardy said.

Nazih Al-rashid, director of Student Support Services, said some people were quick to blame terrorist motives on religion.

"This event shouldn't be associated with any religion. It's a wrong way of informing people about Islam during the time of Sept. 11," he said.

The names of many terrorist groups may cause confusion because of their religious connections, including HAMAS (an Arabic acronym for Islamic Resistance Movement), Hezbollah (Party of God), and Palestine Islamic Jihad.

However, the lives of Muslims unstained by military control take on a different view of life. They believe in God, angels, revealed books, prophets and messengers of God, the Day of Judgment, and divine predestination.

The religious text in which Muslims believe, the Koran, is to them what the Bible is to Christians. It states the fundamental beliefs of Islam.

Aside from the Koran, the Five Pillars are the framework for a Muslim's life.

They are to bear witness in public, at least once in a lifetime, of God and his prophet Muhammad; pray five times a day; pay Zakat, which is two and one-half percent of one's capital every year, fast during the month of Ramadan from dawn until sunset, and perform the annual pilgrimage to Mecca at least once in a lifetime. According to Islam-guide.com,

"Inciting terror in the hearts of defenseless civilians; the wholesale destruction of buildings and properties; the bombing and maiming of innocent men, women and children are all forbidden and detestable acts."

"[Islam] is like any other religion," Al-rashid said. "It carries the same values and messages that religions such as Judaism and Christianity do."

Islam is the fastest-growing religion in the world, practiced by one-fifth of the world's population.

BYU engineering student fixes, destroys car for demolition derby

By Ken Dahl
dahl@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

> "I got hands-on experience of how the car works, even though I was ripping it apart instead of putting it together."
> — Alan Dibb, demolition derby participant

Saturday night, BYU student Alan Dibb crossed out one more thing on his "to do" list when he competed in the Western Round-up Demolition Derby in South Jordan, Salt Lake County.

Some have considered it a little out of character for the studious Alan Dibb, a senior studying mechanical engineering to participate in such an event.

The thought to enter the derby came after a suggestion from his father, Roger.

Roger Dibb saw a sign for the demolition derby and has wanted to participate since he was a young man. He had an extra car, left behind by his second son serving in the Melbourne, Australia Mission.

The Delta 88, affectionately called "Old Yeller", was struggling to pass emissions tests and Roger was searching for a convenient way to dispose of the vehicle.

Roger mentioned the derby to Alan one night and Alan enthusiastically assumed the driver's responsibility.

Roger Dibb said this "was the best father/son activity we've ever done. It gave us time together all summer working on the car."

Alan and his father spent an estimated $400 and 80 hours working on the car over a period of three months to get it ready for competition.

The 80 hours spent working stripped the car of all non-essential parts. This included climate control, windows, interior, seats, dashboard, headlights and taillights.

Stiffening the suspension, installing tubes in the oversized tires, cutting out the fender to allow for the larger tire size, cutting holes in the hood and bolting down the trunk were other modifications added to the vehicle to make it derby-worthy.

To Alan, this summer activity of preparing the car was just another extension of his mechanical engineering pursuits.

"The people who actually design cars are the mechanical engineers," Alan said. "I got hands-on experience of how the car works, even though it was ripping it apart instead of putting it together. It involved a lot of troubleshooting, things wouldn't always go according to plan and we had to make modifications to the design."

Alan Dibb researched derby techniques and strategies through thousands of Internet sites and a careful study of the Western Round-up rules.

Ken Dahl/Daily Universe
Alan Dibb's car is transformed into a masterpiece.

Alan Dibb will not be attempting to receive course credit for this activity.

Alan Dibb's car was "demolished" in the first round of competition, much to the chagrin of an estimated 100 supporters in the stands. Engine still running, Alan Dibb had sustained a direct hit on the rear of the vehicle pinching his tire and stopping the vehicle.

"Those hits are hard! But I am not hurt," the younger Dibb said as he climbed out of the twisted wreck.

Alan painted the car to depict the classic BYU/Utah rivalry using the theme "Bash a Team". The driver's side was painted with the BYU blue and white, while the passenger side, which receives most of the impact as driver's side hits are illegal, paid a small tribute to the University of Utah.

When asked if he would do another derby, Roger Dibb said, "We have another old Oldsmobile. When we put a few more miles on it and my son comes home from his mission (that car) is another good candidate."

Students spend summer serving

By Betsy McIff
betsy@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

While summer vacation means rest and relaxation to many students, some spent their summer finding fulfillment in serving the poverty stricken people of South America.

"I decided that during the school year all I did was concentrate on myself," said Summer McCann, 22, a senior from Salt Lake, majoring in public relations. "Going to serve the people of Peru seemed like a great opportunity to completely envelop myself in a good cause."

McCann along with 25 others spent 10 days working in Peru. The group delivered medical supplies, constructed green houses, visited hospitals and helped start school libraries, McCann said.

Traveling with the group was BYU student Erin Sipherd, 22, a senior from Auburn, California, majoring in recreation management. Of her experience, Sipherd recalled the joy she felt during her service.

"I will never forget the emotional reaction of one of the teachers when we gave her some school supplies," Sipherd said. "She was speechless over a box of poster board, glue and markers."

McCann and Sipherd discovered this opportunity through Chasqui Humanitarian, a nonprofit group based out of Salt Lake.

Chasqui plans and conducts humanitarian expeditions to Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

While there are many services that bring volunteers to aid South Americans, Mandy Johnston, 22, a senior from Marietta, Ga, majoring in psychology decided to travel to Guatemala this summer in search of ways to serve on her own.

Johnston spent 13 weeks of her summer learning Spanish and serving the people of Xela, Guatemala.

"When I arrived in Xela I enrolled in a Spanish school and found a charity to work for run by Australians called Quetzaltrekkers. Through them I was able to perform the service I wanted while I was there," Johnston said.

Working in South America brought living conditions the women never knew existed.

"The first time I went to a village in Peru I was amazed at how they lived," McCann said.

"Their homes were adobe huts, they cooked over an open fire, they slept in the dirt next to pigs, and many had never showered or even washed their hands before," she said.

Like McCann, Johnston spent most of her time helping the poverty stricken children of Xela.

"Xela is a big city surrounded by very poor towns," Johnston said. "Children of these towns are sent into Xela by their parents to shine shoes and find their own way of living on the streets."

Through Quetzaltrekkers, Johnston was able to help build dormitories for these children and feed them regular meals.

"My trip to Guatemala changed my entire perspective on life," Johnston said.

Summer McCann introduces Peruvian children to the magic of soap bubbles. McCann and others spent their summer serving in South America.

"It is unbelievable how poor these people are. Now, everything I find most important in my life is anything, but materialistic."

McCann and Sipherd similarly found their experience in Peru to be a life-changing memory.

"I was incredibly humbled as I performed the work," McCann said. "I was so overwhelmed with how blessed I was, I even started to question why they were born where they were. But then I realized, to them what they have is a blessing."

BYU experience reaches more than Y students

By Tanner Corbridge
tanner@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Ryan Sorenson, 24, from Sandy, Salt Lake County, majoring in aviation science, doesn't mind attending church in a singles' ward.

He said dating opportunities have not been in short supply and ward pilgrimages to LaVell Edwards Stadium have become a ritual.

In fact, one day he's sure he'll miss the whole experience. Overall, college life in Provo is good to him.

Sorenson has lived the BYU experience differently than most BYU students, however. For starters, he doesn't attend BYU.

Sorensen has spent the past three years studying at Utah Valley State College while building his social life in a BYU environment.

And though he can still rise and shout with the best of them, there are some things that have been difficult to adjust to.

"It's hard sometimes, because everyone just assumes that because I attend UVSC I'm hoping one day to attend BYU. There is a prevailing attitude that says, 'Oh, you go to UVSC? When are you transferring to the Y?'" Sorenson said.

Such responses to his enrollment at UVSC have not been uncommon over the years, and he struggles with those underlying assumptions. Especially because the program he attends at UVSC isn't offered at BYU.

But Sorenson knows misunderstandings come with the territory, and he remains in good humor.

It should come as no surprise, however, that Cougar Pride is so plentiful in Happy Valley. For many BYU students, attending school at BYU has always been in the game plan.

Many students have heard mom and dad reminisce about the good old BYU experience since childhood, and attending BYU can be, to some degree, the continuation of a legacy. Some reasonably argue BYU provides the perfect atmosphere for combining the secular and spiritual worlds.

Yet, there remains a fine line to be walked between expressing gratitude and honor for the opportunity to attend such a unique university, while not appearing "holier than thou" to those electing other academic paths.

J. Francis Valerga, bishop of the BYU 135th Ward, has seen the sensitive nature of this issue among students in his ward.

"Everyone knows it's wrong to judge others on the basis of such insignificant and superficial things as what school they attend," Valerga said. "That's as bad as judging people on the basis of what clothes they wear, what car they drive, or how far they can throw a football."

Because university wards are called "BYU wards," one can easily forget the BYU experience is not the only experience.

Valerga also cautioned when BYU students forget that, others might begin to quietly label themselves as second-class citizens in the ward or the kingdom.

Provo Icecats return to the rink after tryou

The Icecats goalie slides to the ice in a desperate attempt to block a goal in last season's game against the HellCats. The 2002-03 team was selected this past weekend after two days of tryouts.

By Jeremy Twitchell

NewsNet Sports Writer

Although the ideas of Charles Darwin are not normally discussed in Provo, his theory of natural selection certainly would have been applicable to the tryouts for the Provo Icecats hockey team.

The tryouts, held in the beginning of September at the Peaks Ice Arena, began with 46 hopeful players vying for one of 26 spots on the team.

However, only 30 players returned for the second day of tryouts, despite the fact that no cuts had been made.

Senior center Greg Ingram said most players left because they only came to gauge their skill level against the team, so that they would know what to improve on in future tryouts.

Freshman left wing Chris Lewis had not played hockey in a while but was hoping to make the team anyway.

"This was my first time on the ice in eight months, and it took me a while to get back in the hang of things," he said.

Lewis also said he felt that the tryouts were not too difficult, and "easier than I thought they'd be."

The two-day tryouts tested players on a number of skills, including speed, maneuverability, passing ability and shooting technique. The coaching staff and former players evaluated them during various drills and scrimmage games.

For the most part, the coaches said the talent level they saw on display during tryouts impressed them.

"It looks like we'll be a faster team than last year, and a little more feisty," said second year head coach Ray Bernier.

"All in all, I think we'll be a little better team than last year. These guys have a lot of heart."

Bernier's prediction shows a lot of promise for this year's team because the Icecats won the Rocky Mountain Collegiate Hockey Association Championship last year.

Ingram said he feels that the team still has a lot of work to do before reaching its potential.

"We're not in as good of shape as we will be in," h

ANGELES — Los Angeles s rookie left-hander ia Ishii, hit in the forehead ne drive, had a two-hour on Monday to remove ips from his nasal pas-ll remain hospitalized for a few days, Dodgers head Stan Johnston said.

scan after the operation eemed normal and the e pitcher was "eating and g," according to the Dodgers. Ishii also sustained a small skull fracture and a concussion.

Ishii, who turned 29 Monday, was struck by the line drive hit by Houston's Brian Hunter in the fourth inning of Sunday's 6-2 loss to the Astros. Hunter drove the 3-2 pitch so hard into the left side of Ishii's head that the ball ricocheted to the backstop. Hunter would up with an RBI double.

Manager Jim Tracy, assistant trainer Matt Wilson and paramedics rushed to the pitcher's aid. Ishii was placed in a neck brace, then on a stretcher and driven off through the center field gate to Good Samaritan Hospital.

Johnston said Ishii was moved to Cedars Sinai Hospital late Sunday night after the nasal fracture was discovered, and Dr. John Yu performed a two-hour operation to remove chips.

A small titanium plate was inserted during the surgery, Johnston said. Ishii was removed from the ICU Monday.

Dodgers spokesman Luis Garcia said no timetable had been set for Ishii's return to the mound.

Cougars face Wildcats

By Matt Montague
matt@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Coming off a 1-3 performance at the BYU Mizuno Classic last week, the Cougars will scratch and claw with the Wildcats of Weber State tonight at 7 in the Smith Fieldhouse.

Hopefully the tough competition of No. 3 USC and No. 6 Florida from the weekend has prepared BYU for Weber State.

The pressure is on for this match, as the Cougars will attempt to maintain a perfect record against the Wildcats.

BYU is 50-0 all-time versus Weber State and hope to add another victory tonight, but a win will not necessarily come easily.

"They are a really nice team," Coach Karen Lamb said. "They played us tough last year, and they are returning most of their starters."

"I'm glad we don't have to travel there to play, because they always play us tougher there," she said.

Weber State is off to an impressive start this season at 5-2 with two second-place tournament finishes, at the College of Charleston Invitational and the Alaskan-Fairbanks Nanook Classic.

They return five starters that went 9-5 in the Big Sky last year.

Weber State is led by senior outside hitter Holly Montano and junior outside hitter Stephanie Kropushek who average 3.75 and 3.61 kills per game.

The Wildcats outside hitters will present a major challenge at the net for junior middle blocker Carrie Bowers and redshirt freshman middle blocker Lexi Brown.

Lamb has shuffled and played around with the line-up to find out what rotation works best for the Cougars.

BYU returns only two starters from last year's 20-9 team.

Junior setter Karina Puikkonen leads the Cougars. She is averaging 9.27 assists per game, 1.27 kills per game and a team leading .268 attack percentage.

Defensively Puikkonen is averaging 1.58 blocks and 1.27 digs this season.

True freshman outside hitter Kim Wilson, who made her college debut this past weekend in the Mizuno Classic against No. 3 USC, looks as if she will have an immediate impact on the team with her powerful blocking and kills.

Redshirt freshman outside hitter Erin Webb has also shown glimpses of brilliance as she tallied up 10 kills, six digs and eight blocks in the victory over Wake Forest this past weekend.

Bowers, who was named to the BYU Mizuno Classic All-Tournament Team, must continue her solid play at the net.

She is averaging 1.58 blocks per game and has been a major contributor on the offensive side of the ball.

Sacramento star indicted

Associated Press

Sacramento Kings star Chris Webber was indicted Monday on charges he lied to a grand jury about his dealings with a University of Michigan basketball booster more than a decade ago.

Webber, who led Michigan's "Fab Five" team to two NCAA title games, was charged with obstruction of justice and making a false declaration before a grand jury, FBI spokeswoman Dawn Clenney said.

Webber's father, Mayce Webber, and his aunt, Charlene Johnson, were indicted on the same charges.

If convicted, each faces up to 10 years in prison and a $500,000 fine.

The indictment contends that Webber, his father and aunt lied to the grand jury and conspired to conceal the cash, checks, clothing, jewelry and other benefits that booster Ed Martin gave the player and his family from 1988-93. All three testified in 2000.

The Kings and a league spokesman each refused to comment on the indictment.

NCAA spokesman Wally Renfro said Monday night that the college governing body would not comment on the indictment. "We just don't talk about infraction cases," Renfro said.

After Martin's indictment, Webber publicly denied taking significant amounts of money from him and said the government's charges were inaccurate. Martin pleaded guilty in May to conspiracy to launder money.

Martin said he paid $280,000 to Webber; $160,000 to Robert Traylor, now with the New Orleans Hornets; $105,000 to Maurice Taylor, now with the Houston Rockets; and $71,000 to Louis Bullock, who has been playing professionally in Europe.

Traylor and Bullock admitted receiving the money in testimony to the grand jury, their attorney, Steve Fishman, has said.

Former Michigan guard Jalen Rose, now with the Chicago Bulls, also said in May that he took "pocket money" from Martin.

Webber led Sacramento to the Western Conference finals, where the Kings were eliminated in Game 7 by the eventual NBA champion Los Angeles Lakers, who won their third title in a row.

Psychic group clouds Smart investigation

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A group of psychics told police they were sure missing 14-year-old Elizabeth Smart could be found entombed in a crypt in the foothills above Salt Lake City.

Two police detectives followed up on the tip last week. They didn't find the girl, who's been missing for more than three months, inside the tomb where American Indian remains rest.

But investigators told The Salt Lake Tribune, in a story published Saturday, that they aren't turning anyone away who might have insight into the case.

> "Many of these (psychic tipsters) are well-meaning, but these tips certainly take manpower away from the investigation."
> — Rick Dinse, SLC Police Chief

Officials from PSI Tech, a Seattle-based company, reported that more than a dozen of its members had determined the location of Elizabeth's body by using a special psychic process they call "Technical Remote Viewing."

Independently, the company claims, 14 visionaries all pointed to a concrete burial vault built by the state of Utah about 10 years ago.

The vault, located in Salt Lake City's This Is the Place State Heritage Park in the mouth of Emigration Canyon, contains the remains of 75 American Indians, many unearthed by construction projects around Utah.

"We searched it very thoroughly. The whole thing was very secure," state archaeologist Kevin Jones told the Tribune. "I certainly didn't want to start opening coffins."

Elizabeth was taken at gunpoint from her bedroom June 5. Her 9-year-old sister was the only witness, and police are short on clues in the crime.

"Many of these (psychic tipsters) are well-meaning, but these tips certainly take manpower away from the investigation," said Salt Lake City Police Chief Rick Dinse.

Still, he said that investigators will check out every psychic vision if the tip is specific. "I don't encourage it or discourage it," Dinse said.

While recently staffing the police department's Elizabeth Smart tip line personally, Dinse took several calls from psychics, some of whom he said seemed "apologetic," but nevertheless felt they had "to help however they could."

Contacted by Elizabeth's uncle, Dave Smart, PSI Tech gathered the company's "special operations team" of 14 professional "remote viewers," who attempted to discern from afar the location of Elizabeth's body.

The same group had decided Elizabeth was killed within hours of her abduction, PSI Tech CEO Dane Spotts wrote on the company's Web site.

"All people are born with natural psychic or sixth-sense abilities," writes Spotts, explaining his technique. "During this process, the viewer becomes linked directly to the collective unconscious."

Spotts was not satisfied with the search, calling it a "cursory peek." He questions why a trained cadaver dog was not allowed inside the crypt.

Archaeologist Jones said cadavers would have been easy to find.

U.S. asks for removal of Afghan checkpoints

Associated Press

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — The commander of U.S. forces in Afghanistan met a renegade warlord to seek the removal of checkpoints hindering troop movements, a U.S. military spokesman said Monday.

The meeting late Sunday was held on the same day fighting flared nearby between militiamen loyal to the anti-government warlord, Bacha Khan Zadran, and government-allied forces near the southeastern Afghan city of Khost.

Lt. Gen. Dan K. McNeill, the commander of U.S. forces in Afghanistan, met Zadran on a road south of Khost to "discuss the placement of two checkpoints that were impeding the flow of coalition forces," said Col. Roger King at Bagram Air Base, the U.S. military headquarters in Afghanistan.

He could not say if the checkpoints were later removed.

Also Monday, tracer rounds were fired near a coalition base at Chapman airfield in Khost, some 90 miles southeast of the capital, Kabul. Coalition soldiers returned fire, King said.

The shots were fired at the base hours after the meeting between McNeill and Zadran, although military officials said they did not believe there was any connection between the events.

McNeill sought the meeting to let Zadran know the checkpoints were starting to interfere with coalition operations and that they needed to be dismantled or he would "suffer the consequences," King said.

There had been reports that U.S. forces were trying to apprehend and arrest Zadran, who has sought to assert control over territories in the southeastern Paktia province in defiance of President Hamid Karzai's administration.

King dismissed those claims, and said they would not arrest Zadran unless he threatened or acted directed against coalition forces.

Zadran, whose gunmen have allied themselves with U.S. troops in past military operations, claims the Afghan president illegally appointed the governor, Hakim Taniwal, in the volatile city near the Pakistani border. It is one of several flashpoints where local armed factions are vying for power and one of the most active fronts in the U.S.-led war against al-Qaida and the Taliban.
